We know that we must use data to drive decisions. We are presented with models of school improvement, such as the research-based "Breakthrough School Improvement," and standards for schools, including those that form the foundation for AdvancED Accreditation. We are also required by Federal and State mandates to complete school improvement plans, technology plans, Rtl plans, and a whole host of others. But what is the underlying constant in all of these puzzle pieces? Data! Join Dr. Fred Schouten as he facilitates this session to learn about an approach that unifies all of these challenges through the identification of data sources, the analysis of varied data types, and the synthesis of information into true school improvement efforts—And importantly, how your school can implement results oriented, data-driven continuous school improvement! (PK—13)

Your learning objectives include:

- Identify types of data available and how they may be combined.
- Explore how to present data visually for better access.
- Learn a process for turning data into information.
- Utilize simple statistics to determine meaning of data.
- Determine how to support quality school improvement standards with data.
